The standard of proof in civil cases in Scotland is on the balance of probabilities with the burden of proof being upon the party who seeks to have a particular issue decided in their favour. In order to do so, that party has to adduce sufficient evidence to support their argument. If evidence is led on a specific issue which leaves the matter in question finely balanced then the party relying on it as part of their case may well lose on that issue.

The importance of corroboration is unique to Scots criminal law. An archaic feature of Scots law, the requirement for corroborating evidence means at least two different and independent sources of evidence are required in support of each crucial fact before an accused can be convicted of a crime. This means, for example, that an admission of guilt by the accused is insufficient evidence to convict in Scotland, because that evidence needs to be corroborated by another source. However, testimony f

In any court case, the parties must produce evidence in support of their case – whether that is the claimant/prosecution or the defence. Without supporting evidence, the claim/prosecution or defence is highly likely to fail. Whilst witness evidence is critical in court proceedings, not all evidence produced is in fact admissible.

9. CORROBORATION. 9.1 The requirement for corroboration of evidence in criminal cases is an ancient and highly distinctive feature of Scots criminal law. Generally speaking, it is not used in other countries. The Carloway Report provides a description of the rule: " there must first be at least one source of evidence (i.e. the testimony of one witness) that points to the guilt of the accused as the perpetrator of the crime.
